Dogeverse Price Prediction: DOGE Remains Bullish as Dogeverse may Explode

Dogecoin (DOGE) has had mixed fortunes lately. The coin rose throughout March but fell dramatically in April and early May.

However, despite DOGE's volatility, many traders remain bullish on its long-term prospects.

Some traders are also bullish on the new meme coin project Dogeverse (DOGEVERSE) - which has raised over $13 million during its token presale event.

Holders of DOGE are headed for a wild ride as the coin reaches a two-year high

Over the last several months, Dogecoin's value has fluctuated wildly.

The popularity of meme coins skyrocketed in February and March, which was great for DOGE, which reached a high of $0.228 on March 28.

For DOGE, it was the highest point since November 2021.

This historic upswing started in October 2023 and culminated in a 302% increase for DOGE before reaching its pinnacle in March.

But since then, DOGE has lost about 35% of its value.

Actually, DOGE experienced a 47% decline last week before a small recovery.

A couple of things are probably to blame for Dogecoin's decline.

The first is that the entire cryptocurrency market has been struck hard as the price of Bitcoin (BTC) has fallen from its all-time highs.

When Bitcoin has problems, the market as a whole usually does as well.

Second, interest in meme coins, which were crucial to DOGE's meteoric rise, has subsided.

This has led many investors to cash out, which has caused a general downturn in the market.

Analysts Maintain a Long-Term Positive View on Dogecoin

There is widespread agreement that Dogecoin's long-term bullish trajectory is unaffected by the recent downturn.

The coin has already demonstrated time and time again that it can overcome doubters and keep climbing no matter what the market throws at it.

In terms of the long run, the technicals look good for DOGE.

Last week, at approximately $0.124, DOGE created a double-bottom pattern on the daily chart, indicating that level has solid support.

Plus, on a daily basis, it remains trading at a comfortable level above the critical 100-day exponential moving average (EMA).

The spot volumes should also be taken into account; DOGE has traded for an unprecedented $1.1 billion in the last 24 hours.

Its continued high level of interest is demonstrated by the fact that it is now the tenth most traded cryptocurrency in the world.

Even well-respected analysts are sounding the positive note.

According to a recent tweet from Crypto Daily Trade Signals, Dogecoin is “building a strong base” before it may potentially surge to $1.

It may be prudent to begin accumulating DOGE when analysts with this level of expertise begin to discuss the dollar mark.

Dogeverse Raises $13 Million and Draws Optimistic Prediction

As the price of Dogecoin keeps going up and down, another cryptocurrency with a canine theme, Dogeverse, has been making waves. This multi-chain meme coin may be preparing for a huge pump once it lists on exchanges, according to some prominent voices like Jacob Bury.

Can you tell me more about Dogeverse? Similar to Dogecoin and Shiba Inu, it is a cryptocurrency that draws inspiration from the popular Doge meme. But what really sets Dogeverse apart is the fact that it runs on not one, but many blockchains at once: Ethereum, Polygon, BNB Chain, Solana, Avalanche, and Base.

The ability to leverage the strengths of several networks and improved accessibility are two benefits of this multi-chain approach. Also, Dogeverse is providing more use cases and is steadily growing an enthusiastic online community.

As an example, token holders of DOGEVERSE have the opportunity to bet their tokens and earn dividends of up to 71% annually. Dogeverse has the potential to become more than simply another meme coin with its multi-chain, staking-enabled strategy.

It is not surprising that the project's Twitter profile has gained more than 14,000 followers in such a short period of time. As of this writing, Dogeverse is nearing the end of its presale phase, during which early birds can take advantage of discounted prices.

You can buy DOGEVERSE coins for $0.00031, but you only have a short window of opportunity to do so before the token debuts on DEX.
