SEC vs. Ripple: XRP Lawsuit Coming To A Close In March?

Major Takeaways:

- The SEC's decision to drop lawsuits against Coinbase and Kraken has intensified speculation about Ripple's legal battle.
- Pro-XRP attorney Jeremy Hogan hints that a resolution to the XRP lawsuit could arrive as early as March.
- Hogan suggests Ripple CEO Brad Garlinghouse may attend the upcoming White House Crypto Summit, further fueling anticipation.

Ripple vs SEC Lawsuits To Resolve in March?

The prolonged legal battle between Ripple and the U.S. SEC has kept the crypto community in suspense. However, recent developments suggest the regulatory tide may be shifting. Over the past few weeks, the SEC has been withdrawing from several high-profile enforcement cases, including those against Coinbase, Consensus, Gemini, and OpenSea. Most recently, Kraken also saw its case dismissed.

This wave of dropped lawsuits signals a significant departure from the aggressive regulatory approach championed by former SEC Chair Gary Gensler. With these signals, speculation is growing that Ripple could be next. In an ongoing discussion, pro-XRP lawyer Jeremy Hogan has hinted that a resolution could come to an end as early as March.

Meanwhile, in an ongoing discussion, a community member asked Hogan whether the SEC's recent trend of dropping lawsuits could lead to a quick resolution for Ripple in March, with the injunction issue handled later.

Quick Q - Thank you Jeremy for the latest detailed case analysis. I see why the injunction issue may take until April/May. In the spirit of SEC dismissing many cases the past two weeks, is it possible they could dismiss the appeal soon in March? and handle injunction part later.

Yes, but I'd wait until everything is hashed out before dismissing the appeals. This all has to be done very carefully.

Just spit balling here, but one interesting option "could" be (not really sure this is truly an option) SEC saying, just like they did in coinbase suit, that they "intend" to dismiss appeals, and later commissioners vote on it, and perhaps they wait to vote until all hashed out Hogan responded that an early dismissal is possible but warned that all legal matters must be fully settled before celebrating.

Adding to the speculation, Jeremy Hogan also disclosed that Ripple CEO Brad Garlinghouse could attend the White House Crypto Summit. While some have questioned the credibility of this claim, Hogan remains confident, intensifying speculation about a potential game-changing moment for Ripple.

Ripple vs SEC Lawsuits Overview

Ripple's legal battle with the SEC is more than just another enforcement case—it stands as one of the longest and most significant lawsuits in crypto history. Since its filing in December 2020, the case has centered on the SEC's claim that Ripple's sale of XRP constituted an unregistered securities offering spanning years. At the time, this was a landmark action that set the stage for future regulatory crackdowns on the crypto industry.

Interestingly, the lawsuit predates both SEC Chair Gary Gensler and President Joe Biden's administration. It was initiated in the final weeks of Donald Trump's first term under then-SEC Chair Jay Clayton, making its timing unusual even before the broader regulatory push against crypto accelerated under Gensler.

For years, XRP was viewed as a regulatory outlier. However, in a pivotal 2023 ruling, Judge Analisa Torres delivered Ripple a partial victory, determining that XRP sales on exchanges did not qualify as securities transactions, as buyers were not dependent on Ripple's efforts for profit. This decision was widely seen as a major win for the crypto industry and a setback for the SEC's aggressive enforcement approach.

Despite the ruling, the case dragged on, culminating in a $125 million penalty against Ripple in August 2024. As the Biden administration approached its final months, the SEC escalated the dispute by filing an appeal on January 15, 2025, seeking to overturn Torres' ruling. Meanwhile, Ripple had filed a cross-appeal in October 2024 but has yet to take formal action on it.

What's Next for Ripple Lawsuits?

Given the SEC's recent pattern of retreat under Trump, it's highly likely that the Ripple case will be quietly resolved in the coming weeks. The agency may either reach a settlement with Ripple or allow the case to fade away as it shifts toward a more industry-friendly regulatory approach.

The SEC filed its opening appeal on January 15, 2025, and Ripple has until April 16 to respond. However, even if the case drags on, it is unlikely to shape future enforcement strategies. The current regulatory climate under Trump leans toward negotiation and industry collaboration rather than aggressive litigation. In this context, Ripple's legal battle feels more like a remnant of the past rather than a defining moment for the future of crypto regulation.

For now, the focus remains on the SEC’s next move—but all signs point to Ripple’s long-running legal saga finally reaching its conclusion. With regulatory uncertainty fading, XRP price predictions could see a major surge, especially if XRP is added to the U.S. Crypto Reserve. If that happens, XRP’s price trajectory could heat up in a big way.

XRP Price Prediction

U.S. President Donald Trump recently announced XRP’s inclusion in the proposed Crypto Strategic Reserve, fueling a bullish sentiment around the asset. Following the announcement, XRP’s price surged, coming close to setting a new all-time high (ATH).

While the Strategic Reserve strengthens the bullish outlook for XRP, skepticism remains about its potential to reach extreme price targets. A surge to $10,000 per XRP would push its market cap into the trillions—surpassing the size of the global economy—making such predictions highly unrealistic.

Despite these ultra-bullish projections, analysts have put forth more conservative yet optimistic price targets. Crypto analyst Egrag Crypto recently forecasted that XRP could climb to $320 within the next year, with a potential rally to $30 by May. Meanwhile, analyst Dark Defender suggested that XRP could reach $8, regardless of the outcome of Ripple’s legal battle with the SEC. However, a favorable settlement in the lawsuit could act as a catalyst for an even greater price surge.
