Sei Network is a layer-1 blockchain built on the Cosmos SDK framework, specifically tailored for high-frequency trading applications. Its primary focus is to provide faster transaction speeds compared to platforms like Solana. The project aims to offer developers the necessary infrastructure to construct secure and efficient decentralized exchanges.

Initially conceived as a scaling solution on Ethereum, Sei shifted its approach due to concerns related to Ethereum's centralized sequencer system and limited throughput. Instead, it launched as a layer-1 protocol optimized for trading, utilizing the Cosmos SDK and Tendermint Core mechanisms.

Since its launch, Sei has demonstrated notable growth and adoption:

- Over 200 teams are actively building on the Sei blockchain.
- More than 7.5 million unique wallets have been created on the network.

- The user base has exceeded 354,000 users.
- The network has witnessed over 285 million transactions since its inception.

Sei has formed a robust ecosystem, attracting prominent projects such as Bitget, Fable League, Falcon Wallet, and others. Developers within this ecosystem have access to a $120 million development fund.

SEI is the native token of the Sei blockchain network. Its functions include paying network gas fees, participating in governance decisions, and contributing to cybersecurity through staking.

On August 15, 2023, major exchanges including Binance, Bybit, and Bitget listed Sei's native token (SEI). The token's price initially opened at $0.064 and surged to $0.48, settling at $0.18. Sei also launched the beta phase of its mainnet, aiming to finalize transactions within 0.5 seconds and process up to 20,000 transactions concurrently.

What Factors affect the Price of SEI?

Before outlining Sei token statistics and prices, let's understand a few key elements that affect SEI prices:

- Supply and demand;
- Regulatory environment;
- Technological progress;
- Competition with DEX space;
- Global economic conditions;
- Investor interest;
- Positive news and developments.

First of all, in addition to the supply of SEI token itself, changes like market demand, the general state of the world economy, inflation rates and regulatory will affect the price of SEI token.

In addition, market sentiment toward SEI may also be influenced by concerns about overall volatility and regulatory uncertainty in the cryptocurrency space, resulting in downward pressure on SEI prices.
